

How did GORDIE BROWN go from political cartoonist to being voted Nevada's "Entertainer of the Year"?

GORDIE BROWN was born and raised in Montreal, Canada. While working as a political cartoonist for the Ottawa Sunday Herald, his co-workers entered him in a talent contest, which he took first place. There was no turning back! GORDIE caught the entertainment bug. With nothing more than a suitcase, Gordie headed south for Las Vegas. His goal was to break into the big time and work with fellow Canadians Paul Anka and Rich Little. Well, the gamble paid off! In less than two years, GORDIE was opening for both Anka and Little...and for other stars such as Jay Leno, Louie Anderson, Kenny Rogers, Randy Travis, Barry Manilow, and Jerry Seinfeld...

GORDIE then moved to Los Angeles to pursue a career in stand-up comedy where he had his national television debut on A & E's "Evening at the Improv". Founder of the Improv, Budd Friedman said, "Through the years I've seen thousands of comedians, and few have caught my eye and attention like GORDIE BROWN."

After co-hosting NBC's "Friday Night Videos", GORDIE wrote and recorded the theme song for the Emmy-Award winning animated series "Life with Louie". He made several memorable appearances on "Hollywood Squares", and also landed the starring role of 'Mr. Jones' on PAX TV's "Twice in a Lifetime", a drama series which continues to air all over the world.

GORDIE was then approached by Harrahs corporation to headline his hilarious one-man show in Reno, NV, where he remained for over two years performing nightly to sold-out audiences. During which time, Gordie received numerous awards, including "Entertainer of the Year!", "Best Comedian!", "Best Show" and "Best Entertainer!"

Gordie is currently in negotiations with a major network to star in his very own sitcom, and remains one of the most sought-after entertainers in the corporate market today.
