

WARREN BOYD
Co-Executive Producer, The Cleaner

Warren Boyd has spent nearly the last 20 years of his life as a dedicated counselor to numerous clients ranging from high-profile names to perfect strangers. His expert advice is sought out to help others get clean – often by any means necessary.

The Cleaner is loosely based around circumstances that he encountered over the past two decades. Boyd, who serves as a co-executive producer, was introduced to Jonathan Prince, and the idea of The Cleaner was born out of their conversations. Price understood Boyd's life mission, what his work was, and was able to wrap his head around the partly secretive, partly incomprehensible, very non-traditional method that he employs on a daily basis to help others get clean. He does this at any cost and often he or his team members are at risk and their lives in jeopardy. A "whatever it takes" approach has helped Warren get many people to kick their addictions. Boyd and Prince collaborated to take scenarios, incidents, and people to inspire stories based on truth. The result is The Cleaner.

Boyd conquered his addictions on his own and was inspired to help others – this vow is his passion. At the time he was overcome with the distinct feeling that no one understood him, and if only he had someone to talk to then, perhaps he would have a chance. During his most chaotic time of heavy drinking and drug use, he realized that he didn't trust anyone. The only thing he could trust was something intangible...something he couldn't see. He called it God – it was easier to trust something invisible as it wasn't going to come banging on his door. Warren's spiritual awakening was triggered by the birth of his daughter, and it led him to believe that whatever you choose, whatever you call it, you need some sort of contact – someone to talk to, someone to understand you.

Boyd hopes The Cleaner shows people in their living rooms things that they aren't looking for – or perhaps don't know about – to help them with their teenagers, mothers, fathers, colleagues, friends, and close ones. He hopes the show will help people trust the process...the process of people trying to help other people.
